

PS

3513

R37N3

1897

Class _____

Book _____

NASTURTIUMS
bright and gay.

Gray, Bessie

L. PRANG & Co BOSTON U.S.A.

Spread thy green
umbrella, little flower;
crouch and cover
Neath its shielding surface from the eager silver shower.
See, the great tears gather at the edge, and trickle over:
Dost laugh, O little flower,
at the baffled rain,
thy lover?

Bessie Gray.

And across the garden borders,
in a sunshine gay and golden,
See, a gallant army marches with its gonfalons unfolden.

As when from
cloistral coolness,
underneath
Green tented leaves,
Some fervid flower-sheath
Doth, clambering to the light, unfurl and spread
Its blazoned banners prick'd
with gold and red,
Before the Sun-god's shrine.

Bessie Crary.

Don't you love the time of nasturtiums? Their pungent scent and their colours? They seem to penetrate and glow through everything, and make the time their own.

SARAH ORAND

Nature, noiseless, weaves her fabrics,
Now an arras rich and rare,
Now a dainty dainty carpet, gold brocaded
everywhere;
Here a fringed velvet petal, and a brodered blossom there.

BESSIE GRAY

And nasturtium's flaming torches
light fair Summer
on her way.

BESSIE CRAW

24, 3.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 015 905 525 5